

Member accountability

Climate Group works with many of the biggest companies in the world to accelerate the global transition to net zero. We support these companies to be frontrunners in their field, and together we have set ambitious targets on key aspects of their energy transition: from renewables and the smart use of energy, to transport and the procurement of materials such as steel and concrete.

Before a member can join a Climate Group campaign, we do our due diligence to assess if a company credibly contributes to our mission to drive climate action, fast.

Membership of our initiatives also comes with a clear mutual understanding on the speed and scale of the company's targets. We don't take these agreements lightly - members are required to report on their progress through an annual reporting system, the findings of which are made public every year.

If a member fails to report, or if their reporting does not meet the agreed standard, we will engage in discussions with this company. We will then agree a certain time to meet the reporting standard, where possible with support from Climate Group.

If a member fails to meet the reporting standard, they will have the opportunity to include the information from that year in its reporting in the subsequent year. If the member fails to report for a second consecutive year, we will again engage in discussions and try to support the member in complying with the requirements within an agreed deadline.

If the member fails to meet this deadline, we will assess next steps, which can include ending the membership.
